

Snow White

Once upon a time, in a faraway kingdom, there lived a beautiful princess named Snow White. Her skin was as white as snow, her lips as red as roses, and her hair as black as ebony. Her stepmother, the Queen, was jealous of her beauty and owned a magic mirror that told her she was the fairest of them all — until one day, the mirror said that Snow White had surpassed her.

Furious, the Queen ordered a huntsman to take Snow White into the forest and get rid of her. But the huntsman, moved by pity, let her go. Lost and frightened, Snow White found a small cottage belonging to seven dwarfs who welcomed her warmly. She lived happily with them, cooking, cleaning, and singing.

However, the Queen discovered Snow White was still alive. Disguising herself as an old woman, she tricked Snow White into eating a poisoned apple. The princess fell into a deep sleep, thought to be dead. The dwarfs placed her in a glass coffin in the forest.

One day, a prince traveling through the woods saw Snow White and was enchanted by her beauty. He kissed her gently, and the curse was broken. Snow White awoke, and the prince took her to his castle. They lived happily ever after.

The Queen, upon learning of Snow White's happiness, was never seen again.
